him to our ſiſter, whoſe minde & mine I know in that are one, not to be ouer-rulde; idle olde man that ſtill would manage thoſe authorities that he hath giuen away, now by my life olde fooles are babes againe, and muſt be vſed with checkes as flatteries, when they are ſeene abus'd, remember what I tell you.

Gent. Very well, Madam.

Gon. And let his Knights haue colder lookes among you, what growes of it no matter, aduiſe your fellowes ſo, I would breed from hence occaſions, and I ſhall, that I may ſpeake, Ile write ſtraight to my ſiſter to hold my very courſe; goe prepare for dinner. Exit.

Enter Kent.

Ken. If but as well I other accents borrow, that can my ſpeech defuſe, my good intent may carry through it ſelfe to that ful iſſue for which I raizd my likeneſſe; now baniſht Kent, if thou canſt ſerue where thou doſt ſtand condemn'd, thy maſter whom thou loueſt, ſhall finde the full of labour.

Enter Lear.

Lear. Let me not ſtay a iot for dinner, goe get it ready: how now, what art thou?

Kent. A man ſir.

Lear. What doſt thou profeſſe? what wouldſt thou with vs?

Kent. I doe profeſſe to bee no leſſe then I ſeeme, to ſerue him truely that wil put me in truſt, to loue him that is honeſt, to conuerſe with him that is wiſe and ſaies little, to feare iudgement, to fight when I cannot chuſe, and to eate no fiſh.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honeſt hearted fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lear. If thou be as poore for a ſubiect, as he is for a king, thou art poore enough, what wouldſt thou?

Kent. Seruice. Lear. Who wouldſt thou ſerue?

Kent. You. Lear. Doſt thou know me fellow?

Kent. No ſir, but you haue that in your countenance, which I would faine call Maſter.

Lear. What's that? Kent. Authority.

Lear. What ſeruices canſt thou do?

Kent. I can keepe honeſt counſaile, ride, run, marre a curious tale tale in telling it, and deliuer a plaine meſſage bluntly, ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the beſt diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not ſo young to loue a woman for ſinging, ne dote on her for any thing, I haue yeares on my backe fo

Lear. Follow me, thou ſhalt ſerue me, if I like thee after dinner, I will not part from thee yet; dinner h where's my knaue, my foole, goe you and call my foo you ſirra, where's my daughter?

Enter Steward.

Steward. So pleaſe you———

Lear. What ſaies the fellow there? call the clat-p where's my foole? ho, I thinke the world's aſleepe, h where's that mungrell?

Kent. He ſaies my Lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the ſlaue backe to me when I ca

Seruant. Sir, he anſwered me in the roundeſt mann would not.

Lear. He would not?

Seruant. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, iudgement, your Highneſſe is not entertain'd with tha nious affection as you were wont, there's a great abat peares as well in the generall dependants, as in the Duk alſo, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha, ſaiſt thou ſo?

Seruant. I beſeech you pardon me my Lord, if I be for my duty cannot be ſilent, when I thinke your Hi wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remembreſt me of mine owne conc haue perceiued a moſt faint neglect of late, which I ha blamed as mine owne iealous curioſity, then as a very and purport of vnkindnes; I will look further into it, b this foole? I haue not ſeene him this two daies.

Seruant. Since my young Ladies going into Fran foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I haue noted it, goe you an
